

every image is evaluated under every family

consequence

The family effect is constant across a column, so it contributes no variance to an image-level resample.

At $\sigma_a^2 = 0$ the family-level standard error is at most the image-level one, so any observed widening cannot be an artefact of six clusters.

The ratio grows as $\sqrt{m}$: more images widen the gap, more families close it.